NEWS OF THE MINES

The Commodore Mining Company Has One of the Richest Showings in the District.

CRITTENDEN COMPANY TO BEGIN WORK

The latest and best mine in this level zinc and fluorspar district is the Commodore near the Crittenden Springs, owned and operated by the Commodore Mining Company, of Louisville. The company territory comprises about 200 acres in the vicinity of such well known mines as the Leona, Cartwright, Big Four, Larue and Crittenden mines, all of them being on the Larue vein. This great mine, a genuine bonanza, came into existence two months ago, though the shaft was sunk a year ago to the depth of 100 feet. Two months ago John L. Harpending was employed by the company as superintendent. After spending three weeks in putting the machinery in shape and pumping out the shaft he opened up at the seventy and ninety foot levels, the richest ore body of lead and zinc ever found in this district and in twenty shifts has mined, hoisted and platformed over 200 tons of this rich ore, and this has been done with an average of six men per shift. The mine now employs three men underground, one mucker, and two machine men using Ingersoll-Rand air drill and five men on top to handle ore and machinery. The underground works are so arranged with two levels and four drifts, that the drills and hoist are kept running every hour of the shift. The mine is equipped with three fifty horse power boilers, one 10x12 Ingersoll-Rand air compressor, Lidgerwood hoist and two Ingersoll-Rand air drills. Mr. Harpending informs us that he has thousands of tons of this ore blocked out and will have no trouble in making an average output of 500 tons of ore per month. He has also made arrangements to tap the ore body at a greater depth to add more sloping room to the mines, and invites any one interested in mining in this district to visit his mine at any time.

The Leander Mining Company, composed of Marion capitalists, have taken over the property of the Glendale Mining Company, near the Commodore mines and on the same vein, and a short time ago opened up the largest vein of lead and fluorspar ever found in this district, measuring twenty-four feet wide. This vein was opened up at a depth of three feet. This company is now sinking two shafts 12x12 and have mined about 600 tons of this ore. Supt. A. J. Pickens put several wagons to hauling this ore to the railroad at Marion last week.

The Eagle Fluor Spar Company at the Cullen mine near Salem are busy installing three ore perfection sizers, and as soon as completed will start their 200 ton separating mill.

W. S. Lowery, general manager for the Pope's interest in this district, has the best of the big thing in the New Salem district at his mine, the Watson. This is spar mine to a depth of ninety feet, at which depth lead becomes very much in evidence. Mr. Lowery informs us that, if the weather permits, he will have in a sinking plant and mill within sixty days. He resumed the sinking of his shaft last week and will push things until he adds another one hundred feet in depth to this shaft. He now has some 800 tons of spar washed and on platforms ready for the mill. Mr. Lowery will begin work for the company on three other properties at once.

A letter received from the Crittenden Mining Co., of Henderson, states they will resume operation in the near future. This was received with much joy by the mining people of this district, as this is known to be one of the best undeveloped properties in the county and could, with a little push, grit and greenback, be listed among the shippers.

The Schoolfield-Spees mines will open for the 1907 season April 1. They are in better shape than ever before, and expect to make good progress in the development of their property this year.

There has never been a time when there was so small amount of fluor spar in the yards at Mexico as there is just now. There are three tons of unwashed gravel spar; five ton of lump spar, No. 2, and one ton of No. 1 lump spar, making a total of fourteen tons. There usually about 2000 tons.

One can not look over the report by H. Foster Bain of the Fluor Spar Deposits of Southern Illinois without concluding from the amount of space, to say nothing of what is said in that space, that Hardin county has the greatest amount of spar in the entire spar section. It also has the best quality. In his report he says there two entirely different ways by which this mineral may have been concentrated. One is by the action of the normal meteoric waters of the region which may have gathered the scattered particles into the veins. The other is by the action of the heated waters, either originally meteoric derived from the intruded igneous rock, or in the part from each source. He further says that in the indications are that the chief agency was heated waters in segregation and that an essential portion of the load of these mines was obtained from a large mass of lower-lying intruded rock, of which the dikes are the offshoots. Whatever may have been the origin of spar or the other mineral of our county does not concern the land owner so much the indications that lead to the finding of those minerals. But even this does not concern the Hardin county owners because the minerals are found on the surface. This has been done by nearly every owner of 40 acres of land in our county. Spar and lead are found in many places on top of the ground. It may be well to learn what some of the minerals are so they may be known when found. Fluorite or Fluor Spar is one of the most beautiful of minerals, occurring in cubic crystals and groups of crystals. Sometimes very large and of a variety of colors, from colorless to green, yellow, brown red and purple. It is common to find angles of the cube projecting from the face of another. A very fine specimen of this kind can be seen on a table in the Era office now, which came from the Lead Hill District. These crystals may be cut in various shapes by very light stroke of an edged tool. They yield only when the strike is made line with their cleavage. Fluorite is a common mineral in lead veins and is then to form the "gangue" of the ore. Galena, or Lead Sulphide, is found the Spar, it has cleavage. Much galena carries a small amount of silver, and when this is sufficient in quantity to justify its being worked for the precious metal, it is regarded as a silver ore and called argentiferous galena. In the Miller mines of Lead Hill quite a little quantity of silver is being found. It now appears that if one can find lead fluor spar he is apt to find lead and silver.—Cave-in-Rock Era.

J. N. Boston and Robt. Henry Moore bought of Mrs. M. C. Alvis, near Salem, last week, 85 acres of fine white oak timber. They expect to work it themselves, but the Lawson Bros. offered them a profit, they sold it to them.

The Girl Who Thought She Could

[With apologies to George Ade]

Once there was a girl who thought she could write books and only waited for the opportunity to present herself. Whenever she read a new book on love and swords and horse-play, and then read the newspaper criticism on the book and therewith an advertisement of the interesting young author, she would sigh: "If I were but blind or a cripple and compelled to earn my living some way, I just know that Ernest Seton-Thompson would hire himself into the jungle with his lions and foxes; Mary Johnston's latest novel would be read only by the reviewer's office-boy, while the world would be willing to pay $1.50 for a copy of my living and throbbing discussion of the divorce problem, the Turtle's Spots, the Automobile Bubble, or the Marriage of Molly O'Donnell and Moses Kolinsky."

Her best friend, who wrote for the papers, asked her to let him see her plots as outlined in her little pink note-book. He read them and told her: "You certainly have the artistic instinct and literary inflatus."

By and by our heroine got into hard luck and found that she had to pound her bread out of a typewriter. As she sweated over business terms her thoughts soared to higher things and she stole her employer's time in order to write articles for the papers, usually on Monday morning after a Sunday of reading the joke-page and Robert Browning.

She sent one joke to twenty-one magazines, beginning with the Ladies' Home Journal, and ending with Success. When she received the last little poisonous printed slip, "Not available," she decided to let her home paper, the Rocky County Record, publish the joke among its ads, signed "By a Former Citizen."

Ideas flooded into her head, but did not settle down long enough to hatch anything of merit. Nothing daunted, she read Shakespeare, and tried her hand on a little comedy; she read Tennyson and attempted a poem that was to cast the Princess into oblivion. Dickens would have turned over in his grave until dizzy could he have seen her imitation of his style. But the magazines could not see things her way, and she tearfully confided to her friend that if she were famous and had a clutch with the literary lights, her MSS. would sell for $10 or more per line.

Her friend in the meantime was earning his $40 per once, in so other, for his stunts with the pen and she confided in him. Showed him her stories and asked for his honest opinion.

A few weeks later she read a clever story which had won the prize in a contest in her favorite magazine. The plot seemed familiar, the characters breathed to her, "We have met before." She eagerly turned to the author's name, only to find it, "Dennis."

When she called the attention of her friend to the coincidence, he simply ask her for more plots.

WASHINGTON, our Washington, again the rounding year
Brings back to us thy natal day, which ever grows more dear.

Aye, more and more we reverence thee, thou who didst build so well.
The story of thy matchless deeds sire unto son will tell.

WASHINGTON, our Washington, we see thee kneeling there,
Amidst the snows of Valley Forge, with hands upraised in prayer.

The God of Battles heard thy call and succor to thee sent.
Through all those weary, anxious years his angel with thee went.

WASHINGTON, our Washington, be thou our guiding star.
As thou didst lead us in the past, still lead us from afar;

Still Father of thy Country be, guard and protect thy land,
And may the ship of state e'er feel thy wise and steadfast hand.

WASHINGTON, our Washington, on blue Potomac's shore
Thy body lies in sleep eternal, at rest forevermore.

But thy great soul lives on and on; more glorious grows thy fame,
And millions yet unborn will add their praises to thy name.

The Many Sided Washington

By WALTON WILLIAMS

THAT Washington was very well off in this world's goods is a matter of common knowledge. The fact that he was exceedingly shrewd and thrifty in business matters is not so widely known. He inherited much property, and he increased it by careful management.

Washington was indeed a many sided man. He could conquer a king or increase a corn crop with the same facility to detail. He looked closely after the details to farming as well as in fighting, and therein lay the secret of his success in both these professions.

"Letters and Recollections of George Washington," published by Doubleday, Page & Co., reveals the business side of his life in a manner calculated to convince the reader that the Father of His Country was a likely hand at a bargain. It required a mighty lively rascal to cheat George Washington in a business deal. He was an able judge of men and a severe analyzer of motives. In a few words he could delineate the character of a statesman or draw a correct picture of a servant, and he looked after his servants, both employee and slave, from the head overseer on his plantation to the ugliest scullion in his kitchen.

The letters mentioned were written by Washington to his private secretary, Tobias Lear, a young man from New Hampshire, who occupied that confidential post during the last sixteen years of the great man's life.

In a letter written from "George Town" early in 1791 Washington incloses several other letters, one of which he mentions thus:

Another letter from Colo. Cannon which I may venture to say proves him to be, what I will not call him, and that I need never look for any Rent from him. I pray you to say to him, if he does come to Philadelphia during my absence—that his own statement given at New York—does not justify his present report—and that I am too well acquainted with the prices of grain & the demand for it last year in his own neighborhood, to be imposed upon by such a tale as his letter exhibits. In a word I mean that I am by no means satisfied with his treatment of me.

It is well known that Washington provided in his will for the liberation of his slaves after the death of his widow. While he lived, however, he took good care to see that his slaves served him properly and that they did not permit dreams of liberty to disturb their equilibrium. When the capital of the nation was removed to Philadelphia, Washington took a number of slaves from his Mount Vernon estate to serve in the presidential mansion, a house reuted by the president. It appears from the following remarks in a letter to Mr. Lear from Richmond that Washington was worried lest some of his negroes might obtain their liberty under Pennsylvania's laws:

The Attorney-General's case and mine I conceive, from a conversation I had with him respecting our Slaves, is some what different. He in order to qualify himself for practice in the Courts of Pennsylvania, was obliged to take the Oaths of Citizenship to that State; whilst my residence is incidental as an Officer of Government only, but whether among people who are in the practice of enticing slaves even where there is no colour of law for it, this distinction will avail, I know not, and therefore beg you will take the best advice you can on the subject, and in case it may be found that any of my Slaves may, or any for them shall attempt their freedom at the expiration of six months, it is my wish and desire that you would send the whole, or such part of them as Mrs. Washington may not choose to keep, home—for although I do not think they would be benefited by the change, yet the idea of freedom might be too great a temptation for them to resist. At any rate it might, if they conceived they had a right to it, make them insolent in a State of Slavery. As all except Hercules and Paris are dower negroes, it behoves me to prevent the emancipation of them, otherwise I shall not only lose the use of them, but may have them to pay for. If upon taking good advice it is found expedient to send them back to Virginia, I wish to have it accomplished under pretext that they deceive both them and the Public;—and none I think would so effectually do this, as Mrs. Washington coming to Virginia next month (towards the middle or latter end of it, as she seemed to have a wish to do) if she can accomplish it by any convenient and agreeable means, with the assistance of the State Horse &c. This would naturally bring her maid and Austin—and Hercules under the idea of coming home to look whilst we remained there, might be sent on in the stage. Whether there is occasion for this or not according to the result of your enquiries, or issue the thing as it may. I request that these Sentiments and this advice may be known to none but yourself & Mrs. Washington.

Both his solicitude for the comfort and health of his slaves and his eye for a bargain are revealed by this passage written to Mr. Lear in June, the secretary being in Philadelphia:

As I shall have occasion for a number of Blankets for my people this fall; and as the best time to purchase them I am told is after the winter's demand is over, I should be glad if you would make a pretty diligent enquiry after them, before I arrive; that I may know whether and upon what terms I can get supplied. It is probable I may want near two hundred.

He wrote several times to his secretary regarding them, and Mr. Lear seems to have had a lively chase through the Philadelphia shopping district looking for blankets of the Washingtonian inclination.

President Washington saw a chance to get bargains in servants by utilizing raw material from abroad, and he jumped at it. In a letter dated from Mount Vernon June 19, 1791, he writes to Mr. Lear concerning some proposed changes in the force of servants at the Philadelphia house:

A boy or two may be necessary—there to assist about the horses, Carriages & Harness—but these (which ones) it is possible may be had for their victuals & clothes,—especially if there are large importations from Germany as some articles in the papers say there will be. I mention the matter now that in case arrivals should happen before I get back, of these kind of people, you may be up

Obituary.

On Saturday night Jan. 26th, 1907, Mrs. Robert Crow passed from this life of suffering and of sorrow, into that glorious life where there is no more sorrow nor pain. She was twenty-two years of age last August. Was married six years ago last September. She leaves a husband and one child a little girl four years old.

Mrs. Crow was a patient sufferer for about fifteen months, being afflicted with that dread disease, consumption. I don't think I have ever seen that rare virtue patient more clearly manifested than was to be seen in Mrs. Crow, she never complained and her faith in God was as simple and true as that of a child of his mother.

In her dying hours I read and prayed with her and asked her "Is the way bright? Do you feel the Lord to be present?" and the answer came back prompt and clear "I haven't the least fear, every thing is alright." Oh how rich are they who can thus meet death, I would not exchange a condition like that for the entire world. Her funeral was preached in the Baptist church in Fredonia by the pastor, and laid her body in the Fredonia cemetery, to await the call of the resurrection morning. Many prayers go up to the father that he may guide her husband, that she was so devoted to, into the paths of righteousness, and that dear little Lucile may live to honor God and finally meet mother beyond the skies.

Rising From the Grave

A prominent manufacturer, Wm. A. Feltwell, of Lucama, N. C., relates a most remarkable experience. He says: "After taking less than three bottles of Electric Bitters, I feel like one rising from the grave. My trouble is Bright's disease, in the Diabetes stage. Time to Get Mad.

A member of the Philadelphia bar tells of a queer old character in Altoona who for a long time was the judge of a police court in that town. On one occasion, during a session of his court, there was such an amount of conversation and laughter in the courtroom that his honor became very angry and confused. Suddenly, in great wrath, he shouted:

"Silence, here! We have decided above a dozen cases this morning, and I haven't heard a word of one of them!"—Harper's Weekly.

Neglected Colds Threaten Life.

From the Chicago Tribune.
"Don't trifle with a cold," is good advice for prudent men and women. It may be vital in the case of a child. Proper food, good ventilation, and dry, warm clothing are the proper safeguards against colds. If they are maintained through the changeable weather of autumn, winter and spring, the chances of a surprise from ordinary colds will be slight. But the ordinary light cold will become severe if neglected, and a well established rule cold is to the germs of diphtheria what honey is to the bee. The greatest menace to child life at this season of the year is the neglected cold. Whether it is a child or adult, the cold, slight or severe, the very best treatment that can be adopted is to give Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is safe and sure. The great popularity and immense sale of this preparation has been attained by its remarkable cures of this ailment. A child with pneumonia when it is given. For sale by J. H. Orme.

A Baby

should be sunshine in the house, and will be a welcome addition to suffering humanity. This remedy is becoming the permanent fixture of all households. A mother with children, can get along without a bottle of White's Cream Vaseline in the house. L. H. Orme.

It's a pleasure to tell our readers about a Cough Cure like Dr. Shoop's. For years Dr. Shoop has fought against Opium, Chloroform, or other unsafe ingredients commonly found in Cough remedies. Dr. Shoop it seems, has welcomed the Pure Food and Drug Law recently enacted, for he has worked along similar lines for many years. For nearly 20 years Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure containers have had a warning printed on them against Opium and other narcotic poisons. He has thus made it possible for mothers to protect their children by simply insisting on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. Sold by Haynes & Taylor.

We are pleased to announce that Foley's Honey and Tar for coughs, colds and lung troubles is not affected by the National Pure Food and Drug Law as it contains no opiates or other harmful drugs, and we recommend it as a safe remedy for children and adults. L. H. Orme.

Forbidden Games.

Almost every one of England's popular games has at one time or another been made illegal. Scotland is the same of golf, yet in 1457 the Scottish parliament passed an act entailing severe penalties on any one caught playing the game.

Edward III., Henry IV. and Henry VIII. all strongly objected to football, and Queen Elizabeth made it an offense punishable by imprisonment to play football. There is a record of sixteen people being imprisoned at once for breaking this law.

Football is still under a ban in some parts of the world. Two of the Swiss cantons refuse to allow it, and in Turkey it is absolutely illegal, and those who dare to play it are punished.

Among oddities of laws about games must be mentioned a French decree of the thirteenth century. By the king's command the gallants of the court were forbidden to play tennis "in their shirts." Whether his majesty of France insisted upon coats only or whether the unfortunate players were doomed to practice in complete suits of armor does not appear.—London Graphic.

Agriculture in Africa.

Excepting perhaps some Malayan tribes the African negroes are said to be the finest agriculturists of all the natural races. The Bongos are said to have a greater variety of garden plants around their huts than are found in the fields and gardens of a German village. Irrigation is practiced. The Angolas, in the Kongo district, have practical irrigation. The Wachungu show wonderful skill in irrigating their terraced hillsides by tunnels of water derived from the main stream. "They have a clear mode of irrigating equally a given surface. As the little canals of water are always elevated above the cultivated plants, they will tap them at a convenient spot above the beds to be watered and then turn the stream into a rough conduit made of the hollow stems of bananas cut in half, the end of each stem overlapping the next. Then as the water enters the last joint it is freely turned right and left, distributing the flowing stream in all directions."—Southern Workman.

Too Cold For Overcoats.

"You do not find any one wearing overcoats in Alaska, even in the winter," said a man from that territory. "The principal thing to be careful about is keeping the head, hands and feet warm. In that part of Alaska where I have been the only land transportation is by dog sleds, and to follow them one has to drop into a dog-trot beside the sled. An ordinary suit is plenty thick enough to keep you warm, and an overcoat is dangerous in that temperature. Trotting alongside a sled wearing an overcoat would make you perspire, and the bitter cold would freeze the perspiration. The men there wear a fur cap that covers every part of the head and face except the eyes, and there is only a little peephole for them. Wool lined mitts are worn on the hands and moccasins with wooden stockings on the feet."—Baltimore Sun.

Tragedy of a Wooden Leg.

A man who travels on a wooden leg says: "About the worst accident we ever heard of befalling a wooden-legged man is the time one such unfortunate was going home after being to a late supper, along about 3 o'clock in the morning, when his leg went through an open hole in the grub plank sidewalk, and he kept crawling about that hole all night thinking he was going home. The editor of this paper wants it distinctly understood that we cannot vouch for the truthfulness of this story."—Kansas City Journal.

All the Same.

At one of the large north country churches recently a fashionably dressed lady happened to go into one of the private pews. The vergers, who is known to be a very stern old chap, immediately hustled up to her and said: "I'm afraid, miss, you'll have to cum out o' that. 'This is a pulpit pew.'"

"Sir," said the young lady, turning sharply round, "do you know who I am? I'm one of the Fives."

"I donna care," said the old man, "if you are the big drum. You'll have to cum out."—Edinburgh Scotsman.

Dainty if Not Substantial.

The wife of a farmer had a sister come from Chicago to make a visit. One day the thrashers came, and the guest insisted on doing the work alone and sent her sister away to rest. When twenty-seven thrashers filed in to supper that night they found a sandwich tied with ribbon, one chicken croquette, one cheese ball the size of a marble and a buttonhole bouquet at each plate.—Emporia (Kan.) Gazette.

Long Sight.

The longest distance ever compassed by human vision is 183 miles, being the distance between the Uncompahgre park, in Colorado, and Mount Ellice, in Utah. This feat was accomplished by the surveyors of the United States coast and geodetic survey, who were engaged, in conjunction with representatives of other nations, in making a new measurement of the earth.

Cheerfulness.

The cheerful man's thought sculpts his face into one of kindness, touches his manner with grace and his business life with friendliness toward humanity.—Jacksonboro (Tex.) Gazette.

Both Are There.

Teacher—Is there any connecting link between the animal and the vegetable kingdom? Bright Pupil—Yes, mum; there's hash.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

They are safe because they contain no deleterious drug and are manufactured upon scientific principles of medicine. Allecock's Plasters are the original and genuine porous plasters and like most meritorious articles have been extensively imitated, therefore always make sure and get the genuine Allecock's.

Legislation to Preserve Forests.

The Appalachian and White mountain forest reserve projects belong to the great class of measures which everyone knows to be deserving, but which stand only a poor chance of early adoption. The arguments in favor of the forest reserves are of general application. Government control of such tracts prevents wasteful lumbering, safeguards the watersheds from freshets, increases the value of water powers, protects against forest fires and is in every way a wise and far-sighted policy. Why, then, resist its benefits to one section of the country?

When the Silhouette Was Popular

A Sketch of Washington's Time

By WALTER J. JAMES

(Copyright, 1907, by C. N. Lurie.)

WASHINGTON.

IN Washington's day there was no such art as photography to preserve the likenesses of the great and the humble. But for the painters of portraits in oil the features of the Father of His Country and of the other important figures of his time would have been lost to posterity. There existed, however, one poor makeshift or substitute for the photograph. That was the silhouette. Washington, Franklin, Jefferson, Thomas Paine and other illustrious builders of the republic are preserved to us in silhouette, and even though there had been no painters to portray their lineaments, these simple makeshifts would have given us a fairly adequate representation of their profiles.

The silhouette itself is scarcely older than the American republic. It originated in 1757. Etienne de Silhouette, a Parisian banker, was responsible for both the name and the thing. Personally, however, he had nothing to do with it. The good monsieur was made minister of finance for the French monarchy in 1757. Finances were in a very bad condition. Foolish war and incompetent ministers, not to speak of extravagant extravagances throughout the king's court, had reduced France to a pitiable state. Banker Silhouette was called to the ministry in the hope of solving the problem of extricating France from her poverty. He was wise and prudent. He believed in saving rather than in extravagance. He urged economy upon all the king's courtiers, as well as upon the government officials. This was too much for the reckless, plunging aristocracy. The high fliers of French society laughed loud and long, and they determined to carry out M. de Silhouette's advice by a resort to burlesque. Accordingly they commenced by wearing coats without tails or ruffles, using snuff boxes made of plain wood and wearing hats without plumes. Those who had been patronizing portrait painters turned to the "shadow picture" in sheer ridicule. The shadow picture was the profile cast by the subject on a wall by a certain arrangement of the lamps. The tracing of this shadow outline and its cutting out in black paper and pasting over white paper resulted in a profile likeness. Later, some "artists" grew so proficient that they could cut profiles without the aid of the shadow tracing, making them life size or in miniature at will. These pictures were called "silhouettes," being "a la Silhouette," because they represented strict economy.

A hundred years ago and more the silhouette was exceedingly popular. Scarcely anybody was too poor to pay a strolling artist for cutting a silhouette. Much less than a hundred years ago the silhouette was still popular. There was no family album then. It was too early even sixty years ago for the family album, which now we are disposed to look upon as old-fashioned.

The very first sunlight photograph, ever made in the world, Miss Dorothy Catherine Draper of New York being the subject, was taken by Professor John W. Draper in 1840, and it was nearly twenty years thereafter before photography became really practical. Thus the modest silhouette remained what may be termed the poor man's picture until times well within the memory of many persons now living.

Today the silhouette is merely a curiosity. At some of the summer resorts, at county fairs and expositions an occasional silhouette artist may be found, rapidly cutting the profile of your sweetheart or yourself for a small fee. He probably knows little or nothing of the history of the silhouette, and the pretty maiden who merrily accepts her profile in black on a white ground as a "souvenir" of the occasion is unaware that such great men as Washington and Jefferson actually "sat" seriously for their silhouettes generations before the amateur photographer infested the earth, with his propensity for taking snapshots of everything, from a pug pup to a president.

Why, asks the prying critic, to whom no secular history is sacred, did not Mr. Weems include the several boyhood anecdotes in his first and other early editions? You may reply that perhaps he had not heard of the stories at that time. But the context of the book itself dispenses with that argument. Parson Weems distinctly states that both the cherry tree story and another anecdote showing the little George's goodness of heart, which also he relates, were told to him by an aged lady twenty years before the date of writing. This lady, he said, was a distant relative of the Washingtons and spent much time during at the family home in Fredericksburg, Va., where an orchard that grew the tree that was hacked by the hatchet that George had if he had it.

George Washington was born in 1732. The hatchet incident, happening when he was six, must date from 1738. Nearly seventy years passed before it got into print, yet for thirty years Washington had been a famous character. One is inclined to ask why Parson Weems didn't use the story in his earlier editions, since he says he had known it for twenty years. Moreover, why didn't he tell us the name of this distant kinswoman of Washington, since by his own admission he was writing the life of the "greatest man that ever lived?" Historians who write actual facts are eager to give authorities for their statements.

In his first edition the parson declared, right on his title page, that the matter of the book was "faithfully taken from authentic documents." When the several stories were inserted, however, we find the title page alluding to "various anecdotes," with the reference to faithfulness and authentic documents altogether eliminated.

Weems and the Cherry Tree Tale

George and the Hatchet Episode

By ROBERTUS LOVE

(Copyright, 1907, by Robertus Love.)

REV. M. L. WEEMS.

FOLLOWING is the original cherry tree and hatchet story, faithfully copied from the 1809 edition of Parson Weems' "Life of George Washington. With Curious Anecdotes, Equally Honourable to Himself and Exemplary to His Young Countrymen." The author prefaces the anecdote with a brief paragraph, in which he says "it is too valuable to be lost and too true to be doubted." The famous story begins on page 13 of the book. An old woman tells it.

"When George," said she, "was about six years old, he was made the wealthy master of a hatchet, of which, like most little boys, he was immoderately fond; and was constantly going about chopping every thing that came in his way. One day, in the garden, where he often amused himself hacking his mother's pea-sticks, he unluckily tried the edge of his hatchet on the body of a beautiful young English cherry-tree, which he hacked so terribly, that I don't believe the tree ever got the better of it. The next morning the old gentleman, finding out what had befallen his tree, which, by the way, was a great favorite, came into the house; and with much warmth asked for the mischievous author, declaring at the same time, that he would not have taken five guineas for his tree. Presently George and his hatchet made their appearance. 'George,' said his father, 'do you know who killed that beautiful little cherry tree yonder in the garden?' That was a tough question, and George staggered under it for a moment; but quickly recovered himself; and looking at his father, with the sweet face of youth brightened with the inexpressible charm of all-omnipotent truth, he bravely cried out, 'I can't tell a lie, Pa; you know I can't tell a lie. I did cut it with my hatchet.' 'Run to my arms, my dearest boy,' cried his father in transports; 'run to my arms; glad am I, George, that you have killed my tree; for you have paid me for it a thousand fold. Such an act of heroism in my son is worth more than a thousand trees, though gilded with silver, and their fruits of purest gold!'"

Is the immortal cherry tree story true or untrue? To believe or not to believe—that is the question. So far as the fair fame of George Washington is concerned, it does not matter a fig. That is fixed, a star of the first magnitude. Doubtless there are many good persons who trust fully that little George hacked the tree with his hatchet, and owned up, on the other hand, there are many equally good persons who, preferring to look upon Washington as a man rather than as a divinity and as a real boy rather than as an angel child, deep down in their hearts desire to believe that George never owned a hatchet, that there never was a cherry tree in Papa Washington's garden and that the hacking was a fabrication of a hack writer.

We know who first published the story. "Parson" Weems, Rev. Mason Locke Weems, one of Washington's earliest biographers, did that. But it seems that the story did not appear until the fifth edition of the parson's book, which was first published in 1809, two years after Washington's death, under the quaint title of "A son's Boswell. He was born in Maryland about 1700, studied medicine, but gave it up to go to England and prepare himself for the Episcopal ministry. It appears that he found no bishop in London to admit him to holy orders. Returning to America, he was still worse off, as there was no Anglican bishop in the new world at that time. However, he finally became a preacher, though it is said that he cared little for creed, being willing to preach in a church of any denomination. He appears never to have held a regular rectory. When he was about thirty years old, he became a book agent, selling books through Virginia for Matthew Carey, the Philadelphia publisher. He also began writing books himself and peddled his own works. The Washington life in particular had a great sale.

Parson Weems had a reputation as an amateur comedian and as one of the best fighters in Virginia. When he had no opportunity to exert through sermons, he diverted the people through music and amusing antics. He was, it appears, a stern moralist and in many respects an admirable character, a credit to his period. As an author Mr. Weems cannot withstand the fierce light that heats upon literary criticism. His life of Washington is full of exclamation points and dashes, and in this respect, but assuredly in no other, it resembles Carlyle's "French Revolution." The whole book is filled with the kind of matter which an earnest, devout evangelist of his period might talk to a Sunday school class or preach from the pulpit. Long passages moralizing on incidents in Washington's career are sandwiched between the incidents.

Parson Weems was a prodigious producer. One of his own books which he peddled through Virginia was "The Drunkard's Looking Glass, Reflecting a Faithful Likeness of the Drunkard in Sundry Very Interesting Attitudes. With Lively Representations of the Many Strange Capers Which He Cuts In Different Stages of His Disease." Our Sherlock Holmes must infer from the length and burden of this title that the parson traveled about in a very stout buggy. This book had six editions by 1818. Another work was "The Bad Wife's Looking Glass; or, God's Revenge Against Cruelty to Husbands." As this had but two editions up to 1823, we must conclude that the ladies didn't take to it as they did to the drunkard's looking glass. "Hyem's Recruiting Sergeant; or, the New Matrimonial Tattoo For Old Bachelors," was even more popular, for it had seven editions by 1821.

Resolved, "That Labor Unions are More Pernicious than Trusts."

Speech delivered by Mr. Gray Rochester, in Morganfield-Marion High School debate, at Marion School Auditorium, Jan. 11, 1907.

HON. JUDGES, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:

The question for discussion tonight is, Resolved that labor unions are more pernicious than trusts. The trust is a combination of wealth for the purpose of defeating competition, and thereby controlling the price of certain products. Thus from this definition, which I am sure will be accepted by my opponents, as a fair one, it will be readily seen that all combinations of capital are not trusts in fact there are very few so-called trusts. In the U. S. The affirmative is not here tonight to argue that trusts are right or necessary, but we do claim that trusts are not wholly pernicious and have many good features. We propose to prove that labor unions are more pernicious than trusts, for we find no good features in labor unions worth speaking of. We have so long been in the habit of regarding trusts as evil, and have such "inbred" hatred toward trusts, that all of us are to a degree prejudiced against them. On the otherhand all of our sympathies are with the laboring man and his efforts. We usually say that capital can take care of itself. But tonight we desire to put aside our prejudices and debate the question upon its merits. To be able to arrive at a just conclusion, we must examine first into the principles and operations of each, and second the good and evil that naturally result from them.

In the first place trusts are organized and operated by the most successful business men of our country, composed ordinarily of a few capitalists, whose primary object of course is to enrich themselves, yet in almost every instance it has worked a benefit to the general public. For instance, the Standard oil trust which has made Rockefeller a multi-millionaire has at the same time reduced the price of oil 50 per cent and but for the combination of wealth which has made possible the pipe line and facilities for handling and distributing the oil, it would have been 50 per cent higher today.

Secretary Hitchcock on the 14th inst. declared that the Standard oil trust had a monopoly on production of oil in Indian Territory and had forced the price of oil down. And today while the U. S. government furnishes its weapons to the pending struggle with Standard oil and while dispatches from Rome tell of a united movement in Europe to crush the oil trust, the indignant corporation bids its stockholders be of good cheer as the company's position is unassailable from both a legal and moral standpoint.

Again take the great trusts that have been formed for the purpose of controlling the output and price of the woolen and cotton goods of our country. The result is that no more factories are run than are necessary to supply the demand, and the country's supply is sold by samples, and after the orders are in the goods are woven and manufactured. Hence there is no surplus and consequently no loss. What is the result? At least a portion of the profits gained in the way of saved labor and fuel and of unsalable stock, is given to the consumer.

These are the principles and results of a great majority of our trusts. I admit that some organized capital, when it takes on the nature of a trust is pernicious, but it has been absolutely necessary in the development of commerce and business of our country. What would we have been today without the combination of wealth? And yet every organization of capital partakes of the nature for a trust to some extent.

Still all combination of capital are not trusts. But every trust is a combination of capital. If then we agree that combination of capital are not pernicious, unless they have the trust feature; and inasmuch as all trusts have the good features of combination, than we readily see, granting that the trust feature is pernicious, that it has much to offset it. Besides, inasmuch as labor unions are avowed enemies to capital whether it be a trust or not, and take every occasion to injure wealth, it can not be claimed that they are a benefit to capital. If they raise the price of production unreasonably high, the consuming public generally suffers. Then if the union man does not benefit himself the labor unions, work no good to any class. We do not yield this one point and before this debate closes we will prove that unions are not for the best interest of the union man himself. But since we have decided that capital is for the highest good of our country, if unions harm it, surely they are pernicious. If they do not hinder capital they are useless, and have not accomplished that for which they were created. Besides they have brought about a feeling of distrust that has hindered business in almost every conceivable way.

In principle, labor unions are themselves trusts. They are combinations for the purpose of destroying competition, thereby controlling the price of wages. They however have none of the good features that accrue to our country from capital combinations. Besides they have many features which when we rightly understand them are very pernicious.

The kinds of unions are too numerous to mention. There are the Miners union, the Coopers union, the Printers union, the Teamsters union the Boot-black union, and even the cooks and chorus girl's union. All are akin in principle, all strive to hinder capital. None however, as is usually supposed, fight the trusts. There is only one authenticated case on record, where a strike has been ordered against a trust, and that by unorganized laborer. Again the American Society of Equity, with its Tobacco Growers Association of Kentucky and other tobacco growing states, the Farmers Educational and Cooperative Union of the cotton growing states, and the Texas Farmers Society of Equity, are not labor unions. They are producers associations and the avowed enemies of trusts. Whether these producers associations are pernicious or not has nothing to do with this question tonight. Not only have we been in sympathy with labor, but we have almost committed the error of not suspecting them. Trusts are at all times in the lime-light and we demand inforce legal inspection of their secret transactions. So great is our confidence in the laboring man that we permit him to have his secret meetings and take it for granted he is discussing matters for his country's general welfare. We refuse to be aroused from our complacent lethargy until he has dynamited a factory, flooded a mine, or killed some innocent officer in the discharge of his duty.

Again the labor unions are composed of every nationality and every class, the rich and the poor, the high and the low, the vicious and the docile, the criminal and the law abiding, the vagabond and the gentleman, the man with character and the man without character, the man who loves his country and the man who hates it. The man who recognizes the worth of the law and the man who respects no law. One conglomeration of individuals unwieldy and unmanageable. With what object in view? The increase in wages and the increase in the price of products. Its object is for self alone and never benefits the public. The object being for the increase of wages which necessarily increases the price to the consumer of their product, whatever it may be. The increase of the price of any product is felt most heavily by the consumer. All men being consumers, then all men are effected directly and living comes higher.

When the Hair Falls

Then it's time to act! No time to study, to read, to experiment! You want to save your hair, and save it quickly, too! So make up your mind this very minute that if your hair ever comes out you will use Ayer's Hair Vigor. It makes the scalp healthy. The hair stays in. It cannot do anything else. It's nature's way.

Take for instance the Mine-workers union who are continually striking for higher wages, the result is the increase in the price of coal to the consumer. Coal being an article needed in every family in our land, and by every factory and railroad, it increases the cost of living to every human being. The fires upon our own hearth-stones are more expensive, the shoes and clothes we wear are more dear because the cost of production and transportation is made more expensive, and in the end the consumers pay it.

What is true of one labor union is true of all others. All equally corrupt and pernicious, and what is pernicious in one is pernicious in all. While they claim to be organized for legitimate purposes, in every instance they have been used for illegitimate purposes.

In theory unions are organizations for the protection of labor against the tyranny and oppression of capital. In practice labor unions are organization for the restraint of labor and the manaceling of capital. The modern labor unions are combinations for the sole purpose of surtherring the interests of the trade or craft as a whole. In the old system there was the element of solidarity in the relations of labor and capital, in the new system there is the element of antagonism, in the old system the craftsman prospered according to his skill and industry, in the new system skill and industry is reduced to one common denominator called the union scale of wage.

Again, my friends, labor unions are akin to socialism, and everyone here agrees with me when I say socialism is a form of anarchy. And it is becoming evident that labor unions are turning to the socialist party. The Countess of Warwick said, "The only hope for the working class is socialism." Already the Cigar Makers union has pledged itself to socialism. Also the Brewer Makers Union No. 114, of Providence, R. I. But this is not the climax. The Western Confederation of Labor, with 160,000 members in their tenth annual convention, heartily endorsed the platform of the socialist party, and it is only a question of time when others will follow in their foot-steps.

Nor is this the worst feature. We could afford to be taxed to the limit to live. We could pay it and bear it, if they would only let a citizen enjoy what is rightfully his, and run his own business.

The worst foes of America are the foes to that orderly liberty, without which our republic would speedily perish. The reckless labor unions that arouse the mob to riot and bloodshed is in the last analysis the most dangerous enemy to our country.

Never can this republic stand if the labor Union is developed to its maturity and final completion as contemplated and hoped for by its leaders.

And as years go by and only the large outlines of lofty American characters and career remain, the great republic will confess the benediction of a life that will set at naught that disposition for greed and gain that prompts men to shoot down their fellow men who are seeking honest employment in order to procure an honest living and drive perhaps the wolf from his door, and who for greed and gain resort to the torch and burn down the property of those who are in sympathy with their ideas of right and wrong. With those ideas of right propagated and proclaimed by labor unions, and are the direct results of their unions, if they are to be cherished and fostered by this government, it will prove our downfall. But with this spirit eradicated, and the proper restraints thrown around wealth, America will still stand and bid the distant generations hail. The aspiration of her natural life must be the sublime moral courage to combat in time, this the greatest curse to our country.

And in conclusion, ladies and gentlemen, I will speak of the effect of unions on politics. Our great political parties today together with our chief magistrat, are afraid to correct the evils that result from unions, but for political purposes accept the situation.

Today the leaders of the great political parties are criticising unrelentingly the acts of the Federal Judge, Evans, because he had the nerve and courage to stand up for what he thought was right, declare unconstitutional a Federal law that undertook to take from a railroad company, the right to employ or discharge whosoever they might deem proper. And why this criticism? It is to make fair weather with this stupendous power the labor union, whose votes are needed to elect any party to power. Hence I repeat it, it will be a dark day for America when this union of strength intimidates the great political parties who are now at its helm and wrenches from them this government and places it in the hands of the Socialistic party. Our leaders cannot afford to flatter the mob or hang upon its neck, nor pander to its passions, nor can they afford to suffer its foaming hate, or its exulting enthusiasm to tough the composure of our country's business. Time forbids me to arraign unions further, but my colleagues will tell you still more of their perniciousness.

Neglected Colds Threaten Life

"Don't trifle with a cold," is good advice for prudent men and women. It may be vital in the case of a child. Proper food, good ventilation, and dry, warm clothing are the proper safeguards against colds. If they are maintained through the changeable weather of autumn, winter and spring, the chances of a surprise from ordinary colds will be slight. But the ordinary light cold will become severe if neglected, and a well established ripe cold is to the germs of diphtheria what honey is to the bee. The greatest menace to child life at this season of year is the neglected cold. Whether it is a child or adult, the cold slight or severe, the very best treatment that can be adopted is to give Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is safe and sure. The great popularity and immense sale of this preparation has been attained by its remarkable cures of this ailment. A cold never results in pneumonia when it is given. For sale by Haynes & Taylor.

In the selection of the ingredients and in their manufacture the greatest care is taken to keep up to the highest standard of excellence and so pure and simple are the ingredients that even a child can use them.

Alcock's are the original and genuine porous plasters and are sold by Druggists in every part of the civilized world.

A Story of Evansville

BY O. G. W.

A TRUE STORY.

Once, in a fit of drunken shame,—
Although we pity, still we blame,—
A young man sat, when all too late,
And pondered on his luckless fate.
In silent, moody, careless grace,
He pressed his hot hands to his face,
Unmindful that a little child,
With modest mein and manners mild,
A basket 'tween her tiny palms,
Beside his chair stood, asking alms.
She said, in tones low, sad and sweet,
Afraid her own words to repeat,
"Sir, I have had no bread to-day.
One penny, please, give me I pray."
In rude, harsh tones, "Begone!"
he said,
"For three days, I have had no bread!"
Back to the door, she went, but stood
Willingly, nay, glad to do him good,
And meekly thought, "If I should give
Him my five cents, I think he'd live
Just one day more. I know he would!
And I'd be doing as I should."
Stepping across the room she said:
"Take these and buy a loaf of bread,
Perhaps sir, I can get some more."
May heaven grant her a full store!
With reverent kiss upon her brow,
"My pretty lamb, I'll help you now,"
He said, "to find whatever you need;
For you have given me help, indeed!"
Then, in her hand, so thin and white,
His heart warm with a new delight,
He placed with care the coins he took
From out his well-worn pocketbook.
Between the decorated walls
Of hotel corridors and halls,
To each and every idle guest,
He led the child, in earnest quest
Of their kind aid, and told how she
Had given him bread and sympathy.
Her many coins, like grains of sand,
Grew heavy in her tiny hand;
And, when she had received the last,
Her worthy knight made safe and fast
Each good and precious gift, then sent
Her hastening home ere she had spent
One penny, e'en for meat or bread.
Like a young roe, away she sped!
May He who marks the sparrow's fall,
Who hears the ravens when they call,
Give man and child the bread of life,
And keep them free from sin and strife!
